APRIL 2011

Shortly after 18-year old Shawn Durant began his day loading skiers on the lift at the Nordic Valley Ski Area in Utah, he heard a piercing scream.

Looking up the cable lines of the moving lift, his eyes met a scene that made his blood run cold. Dangling by one arm from a moving chair was the figure of a child. A woman was holding the child with one arm while holding herself in the chair with the other arm.

And the mother was desperately trying to pull her up as the chair advanced toward the first 30-foot tower.

Shawn feared that when the chair bumped over the tower pulleys, the girl would be shaken from the woman's grasp. He yelled to the operator to stop the lift. He ran under the chair and looked up at the girl, swaying nearly 3 stories above him. "I can't hold her for long!" the mother cried.

Shawn scrambled up the ladder of the nearest tower, grabbed the thick, greasy cable with his gloved fingers, and swung out in midair. Hand over hand he made his way to the chair, lowered himself beside the mother, and reached down and pulled Angela up.

At a church service one Sunday after the incident, the mother recounted the rescue. "There are doers and watchers in this world," she said. "We owe our daughter's life to the fact that Shawn Durant is a doer."

Dramas like that are happening all around us. Oh, the dramas aren't happening on ski lifts in Abilene. But in the world of the spirit, parents are fearful that they are losing their grip on their kids, and they worry about their boy or girl falling spiritually and morally. As adults, we sometimes feel like we're dangling 30-feet in the air and that certain disaster is only a breath away.

And so I ask you.....are you a watcher or a doer? If you're a doer, please join me at Community this month. I guarantee you that someone will need you to climb in the chair beside them. You'll both feel better.

Chrysalis Corner

We are combining Flights 52 (Girls) and 53 (Boys) into the same weekend this summer. These flights are still carried as separate flights by numbers but on the same weekend and both at Leuders. The details of the event have been worked out by the Chrysalis Board of Directors and we are confident this will make for an exciting weekend for our youth in the community. We as a board are actively pursuing participation from our local youth by initiating contacts with local church youth groups and leaders.

"Teach children how they should live, and they will remember it all their life." Prov. 22:6 (TEV)

Remember, we are GUESTS there.
